

People First Language

What do you call a person with a disability? A person!

What words define who you are? The color of your skin or hair? Your age? Your weight? Of course not. When words alone define a person, the result is a label...a label that often reinforces barriers created by negative and stereotypical attitudes. Every individual deserves to be treated with dignity and respect...regardless of abilities, gender, ethnicity, religion, sexual orientation, hair color, or anything else.

People First Language

People First Language is an objective and respectful way to speak about people with disabilities by emphasizing the person first, rather than the disability. It acknowledges what a person has, and recognizes that a person is not the disability. In putting the person before the disability, people first language highlights a person's value, individuality and capabilities.

What should you say?

When referring to individuals with disabilities, be considerate when choosing your words. Focus on the person. Never use terms that label, generalize, stereotype, devalue or discriminate. Unless it is relevant to the conversation, you don't even need to refer to or mention the disability. The following chart has some examples of Person First Language:
